

Each Horizon student will receive a box with blank cards. These are being referred to as their personal tool box. Lessons they are taught will become tools to help them reenter society as they face the challenges ahead. Here's an example: When facing an unexpected challenge or confrontation you may choose to react or respond to the situation. The lesson entered on the 3x5 card concerning "respond" versus "react" becomes a tool which can be drawn from their toolbox to help them meet the challenge of the situation before them.

Reentry into a mainstream society can be very difficult. Those who have been isolated from society for long periods of time are very vulnerable to the consequences received from reacting to situations when a careful thought out response would have produced much more desirable results.
